Introduction

You and your doctor can work together to help you be as healthy as you can be. This booklet gives you some quick tips on what you can do to manage stress and depression. You should not use this booklet in place of what your health care provider tells you. If you have problems with your health, be sure to see your doctor (or Primary Care Provider) for treatment.

For questions about medicine or health concerns, you can call your doctor. If you have problems with your health, be sure to see your doctor (or Primary Care Provider) for treatment.

If your health plan has a nurse advice line, you can call them too. If you don't feel well, they can help you decide what to do.

You may have someone who helps you with your health care. You must give permission for your doctor or case managers to talk to this person about your care.

This booklet is to help you. It does not take the place of your provider's care. If you or your family has an emergency, you should call your provider. Or, go to the nearest emergency room.

Stress

Stress is the body's response to any situation that seems demanding or dangerous. Your stress level depends on three things:

1. How intense the stress is.
2. How long it lasts.
3. How you cope with the situation.

Most of the time, stress doesn't last long. Your body can recover quickly from stress. If stress gets really bad and you need help, call your doctor.

But stress can cause problems if it happens too often.

It can also cause physical problems if your body doesn't have a chance to recover. This includes headache, muscle pain, even rapid heartbeat.

Chronic stress is stress that lasts over a long period of time. This could include things like having a difficult job. It also includes dealing with a chronic disease. If you already have a health problem, stress can make it worse.

How stress affects your thoughts and emotions

You might notice signs of stress in the way you think, act, and feel. You may:

- Feel cranky and unable to deal with even small problems.
- Feel frustrated, lose your temper more often, and yell at others for no reason.
- Feel jumpy or tired all the time.

- Find it hard to focus on tasks.
- Worry too much about small things.
- Feel that you are missing out on things because you can't act quickly.
- Imagine that bad things are happening or about to happen.

How stress affects you depends on many things, such as:

- Your personality.
- What you have learned from your family about responding to stress.
- How you think about and handle stress.
- How you cope.
- Your social support.

How stress affects the body

Common symptoms of stress include:

- A fast heartbeat.
- A headache.
- A stiff neck or tight shoulders.
- Back pain.
- Fast breathing.
- Sweating, and sweaty palms.
- An upset stomach, nausea, or diarrhea.

Over time, stress can affect different parts of your body.

- Immune system. You are more likely to get sick often.
- Heart. Stress is linked to high blood pressure and other heart problems.
- Muscles. Tension from stress can lead to neck, shoulder, and low back pain.

- Stomach. If you have stomach problems, stress can make your symptoms worse.
- Lungs. Stress can make symptoms of asthma and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) worse.
- Skin. Problems such as acne and psoriasis are made worse by stress.

What You Can Do to Relieve Stress

Exercise

Our bodies were designed to exercise.
Exercise can help your body work better.

One of the best things to do for stress is to start exercising. It's best to do 30-60 minutes of exercise a day. Do this most days of the week. But check with your doctor first to make sure it's OK.

Quick Exercises to decrease stress

1. Walk in small doses. Get out of your chair and get your legs moving for a few minutes. The quicker you walk, the better.

- 2. Make your lunch break count. If you have a half-hour lunch, spend 20 minutes of it walking. You'll feel a lot better in the afternoon after you exercise.
- 3. March! Do high marches to really get your blood going.
- 4. Chair squats. Chair squats are a quick and easy way to release some energy.

Depression

Everyone has bad or sad days, but it usually doesn't last very long. Someone who is depressed has more severe symptoms. It's hard to live life normally. Some signs of depression are:

- No enjoyment in life.
- Trouble sleeping.
- Trouble concentrating.
- Change in eating habits.
- Low energy.

Depression can be serious. Many people who are depressed can get better with treatment. There are many ways to deal with depression.

Types of depression

There are many types of depression. Some are more common than others.

- Major depressive disorder. When this happens, it's hard to work, study, eat and sleep normally. People don't enjoy life as usual. It's hard to function.

- Postpartum depression. This occurs when a new mother gets depressed after having a baby. Usually it happens within a month after delivery.
- Seasonal affective disorder (SAD). This usually happens during the winter months. It happens more often when there is less natural sunlight. It usually gets better during spring and summer.

Signs and symptoms of depression

People don't all have the same symptoms. How bad the symptoms are can vary. So can how long they last.

People with depression may feel:

- Sad, anxious or “empty.”
- Hopeless.
- Guilty or worthless.
- Irritable, restless.
- Loss of interest in activities or hobbies that they like.
- Fatigue and decreased energy.
- Difficulty concentrating.
- Trouble sleeping.
- Eating too much or too little.
- Thoughts of suicide, suicide attempts.
- Aches and pains that don't get better with treatment.

Mental Health and Illness

Sometimes people dealing with illness get depressed. Sometimes it's hard to adjust, or they are stressed. Having other illnesses can be difficult. This includes heart disease, diabetes, cancer, and other diseases. People who take care of others can also get depressed. It's different for every person.

It can be hard to keep up with a treatment plan. Some people don't understand what they need to do. Family members may disagree with a treatment plan. There can be financial problems. Sometimes people can have problems with anxiety, even panic attacks. Alcohol and other substance abuse can occur with depression.

Treating the depression can make the illness better.

It's OK to ask for help if you are having any of these problems.

Your treatment team can help you. Talk to your doctor, health provider, or case manager. There are also phone numbers to call at the back of this booklet.

If your Final Total score is more than 5, it could help you to talk with a health care provider. Call your doctor, a nurse, or your case manager. Share the results of this test with them. They will talk with you more to help you decide what you can do next.

Treatments

Depression can be treated. The earlier treatment starts, the more effective it is. Call your doctor first. Sometimes a physical problem causes the same symptoms as depression.

Your doctor will give you a checkup. They'll also talk with you and recommend treatment. Treatment can include psychotherapy. This is also called "talk therapy."

Your doctor may recommend medication. Medication for depression works in different ways. If you are taking medication, be sure to take it exactly as your doctor says. Sometimes it takes a few weeks before you notice a difference. With some medications, there are certain foods you should avoid. Be sure to talk to your doctor about this.

Keep taking your medication, even if you are feeling better. Do not stop it unless you talk to your doctor. Some medicines need to be stopped slowly. This is to give your body time to adjust.

How to Feel Better

When you are depressed it can be hard to help yourself. You may feel exhausted, helpless and hopeless. But this will start to get better. These things will help:

- Get out and get active. Go to a movie or a ballgame. Do things you once enjoyed.
- Set realistic goals for yourself.
- Break up large tasks into small ones. Set some small goals and do what you can.
- Try to spend time with other people. Try not to isolate yourself. Let others help you.
- Do not expect to suddenly “snap out of” your depression. Things will get better gradually.

- Don't make any important decisions right now.
- Remember that positive thinking will replace negative thoughts as your depression responds to treatment.

Are you in crisis?

If you are thinking about harming yourself, tell someone who can help right away.

- Call your doctor.
- Call 911 or go to a hospital emergency room. You will get immediate help. You can ask a friend or family member to call for you.
- Call the toll-free, 24-hour hotline of the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline. You will be connected to a trained person who can help.

- » Phone 1-800-273-TALK
(1-800-273-8255)
- » TTY: 1-800-799-4TTY (4889)
- Make sure you or the suicidal person is not left alone.

Support

Many people have stress because of other health issues. These can include:

- High blood pressure.
- High cholesterol.
- Heart disease.
- Diabetes.
- Osteoporosis.
- Depression.
- Cancer.

Coping with these issues can be hard. You might feel fear or anxiety. You might be stressed or become depressed. Talk with your doctor. It's OK to ask for help. Tell your family and friends how you feel. Let them know how they can help you.

Joining a support group can help too. This booklet gives names and phone numbers of places you can get help.

How Can Family or Friends Help?

You may have someone who helps you with your health care. They can:

- Help remind you to take your medicines.
- Help you buy and prepare healthy foods.
- Take a walk with you.
- Go to the doctor with you.

Sometimes it helps when someone else hears what your health care provider says. You must give permission for your doctors and case managers to talk to this person about your care.
